KNEISEL QUARTET CONCLUDES SEASON

Composition by Daniel Gregory Mason Has First Hearing in New York.

The Kneisel Quartet gave the sixth and last of its concerts for the present season last evening in Aeolian Hall. The programme consisted of Daniel Gregory Mason's piano quartet in A minor, opus 7; a trio of Haydn, Beethoven's quartet in A minor, opus 132, and the Schoenberg sextet, entitled "Verklarte Nacht." The pianist was Oskar Gaboriowitch. It was a concert of liberal proportions, but since it was the final one of the season no doubt most of those present did not find it too long.

The quartet of Mr. Mason was heard for the first time in this city. The composer is known as a musician of serious aims, a writer of books on musical subjects which have been of much help to students and amateurs, and a lecturer who has found welcome in many places.

His quartet is for violin, viola, cello and piano, and its general form shows respect for the models developed by the classic masters.

There are four movements, an allegro at the beginning and another at the end, while the second movement is in the scherzo and the third the slow movement. Since the first movement is not an allegro, the tempo is slow, and the development is toward the passionate utterances suggested by the "temperament" character of its second principal subject, the cantabile theme. After this the composer sought a natural and effective contrast by imparting an elastic tone to his slow movement.

Throughout the composition Mr. Mason has shown ingenuity in rhythm. Possessing he has at times overworked rhythmic device, but at any rate his object was commendable, because he was manifestly seeking for musical figure and a clearly defined melodic form rather than to make puzzling excursions into the world of strange harmonies. His quartet is decidedly interesting if not happy in its treatment of the cantabile theme, and its indubitable possession of artistic value and intellectual quality.

The aggressive nature of the piano part, and the dominating theme of the piano part, caused the performance to sound somewhat unbalanced; but the temptation to play this part with a "collegial" for all it was worth" was very great.

A lovely contrast was afforded by the Haydn trio in G which followed. The trio with the audience with joy, the simplicity of its ideas, the fluency of its long, suave phrases and the sunny temper of its mood all came like a fresh breeze after Mr. Mason's introspective modern composition, and it was received rapturously. Again the transition to one of the last quartets of Beethoven, which have always been a field for the exercise of the finest art, was a good one. The Schoenberg sextet was repeated by the quartet. There was no question after its first performance that it would reach the Kneisel programmes, though probably no one expected it would be again so soon. But it is a composition of extraordinary beauty and it will be heard again and again. In its performance Mr. Kneisel and his associates had the aid of Samuel Gardner, viola, and Hyman Eisenberg, cello.

Thus came to a conclusion a season of chamber music which has been noteworthy for the number and artistic value of the unfamiliar works brought forward as well as for the high level on which the performances have moved. A community which is privileged to listen to two such quartet organizations as Mr. Kneisel's and the Flonzaley is fortunate indeed.

FRUGAL FETE FOR BENEFIT OF BLIND

Annual Entertainment Pleases Large Crowd at the Astor.

LARGE SUM IS REALIZED

The annual entertainment in behalf of the New York Association for the Blind attracted a large gathering to the ballroom of the Hotel Astor last night. It was called a "Frugal Fete and Fandango" and while this title was somewhat misleading it gave opportunity for imagination in devising an amusing night for young and old.

The ballroom was arranged with booths of many kinds suggesting frugality on the part of a mythical town. These booths, representing many departments of commerce and trade, each paid $250 for the night's privilege and as there were more than a dozen of them there was considerable cash in hand before any tickets were sold.

Miss Winifred Holt was accountable for much that was offered in the way of entertainment last night and in advance of the fete she gave a dinner at her home, 45 East Seventy-eighth street, her guests including Mrs. P. Cooper Hewitt, Mrs. Frederick F. Thompson, Dr. and Mrs. Joseph C. Bloodgood, State Education Commissioner Dr. John H. Finley, Commissioner and Mrs. Cabot Ward, Mrs. Charles Duer, Capt. It was called a "Frugal Fete and Fandango" and while this title was somewhat misleading it gave opportunity for imagination in devising an amusing night for young and old.

The distinguished officials were present in the keys, seal and freedom of Frugal Town and there were brief addresses by Mayor Mitchell, Dr. Finley and Capt. Spencer. The Baroness Termagant executed a dance of imagination and following this there was a pageant representing the various commodities on sale and the commercial enterprises of the city. The pageant was a success and the money was collected for the benefit of the blind.

There were also a Punch and Judy show, a fantastic circus and acrobatics, a restaurant and soda fountain. The police force of Frugal Town regulated traffic arrangements during the progress of the show. Toward the end of the performance the police and firemen became engaged in mock fights and fires, which did not in the least interfere with the comfort of the assemblage. There was general dancing for the grand windup.

Most of the audience came in fancy dress. Some of the amateurs who helped with the dance were Misses M. G. Johnson, Theodore Latham, Jane and Frances Morgan, Eugenie Rand, Eva Malt, Priscilla, Rosebody, Dorothy and Violet King, Louise Russell Hoadley, Josephine de Gersdorff, Lillian Talmage, Symphoniea Bristol, Jeanette Galt, Isabella Banta Taylor, Mary Stevens Chapin, Sylvia Hyde, Mary Crocker Alexander, Janet Tiffany, Helen Hamilton, Janet Robb, Miriam Harriman, Edith McKee, Vera Cravath, Elizabeth Clarkson, Margaret La Farge, Anna Alexander, Harriet McKee, Sylvia Holt, Emily Winthrop, Angeline Krich, Elizabeth McKee, Justine T. Assand, Elizabeth Burrill, Marie Louise Rodewald, Margaret Luce, Jean Morris, Maud Coster, Elsie Stevens, Eleanor Keen, Helen Kline, and about 100 of the young dancing men.

A BANDBOX CONCERT.

Miss Gottschalk and Mr. Hodgson Spread Youthful Wines.

Belle Gottschalk, soprano, and Hugh Hodgson, pianist, gave a concert yesterday afternoon in the Bandbox Theatre. According to the custom at such entertainments they offered alternate groups of piano pieces and songs. Mr. Hodgson also played Miss Gottschalk's accompaniments. Entertainments of this type are highly interesting, either when they are given by artists of recognized standing or by amateurs who disclose valuable gifts.

It cannot be announced this morning that any important disclosure was made at this concert. Mr. Hodgson is blessed with a natural piano touch and unquestionable musical instincts, but his grasp of his art is of no great power, and he seemed to have little to present beyond the bare gifts of nature. Miss Gottschalk has a good voice of no special distinction and her tone production is not of the highest quality. Her singing of an air from "The Magic Flute" was almost disastrously bad and her delivery of Debussy's "Mandoline" was that of an amateur of small accomplishments.

TRIBUTE TO KING ALBERT.

It is expected that M. de Sadeleer, Belgian Councillor of State, will make an address. Another speaker will be John J. O'Connell, recently a candidate for the Supreme Court bench. There will be a charge for admission and the public is invited.

The following contributions were received yesterday by the various war relief organizations: City Hall, $1,000; Belgian Relief Fund, $1,555.42; American Ambulance Hospital in Paris, $1,200; $353,000; Committee of Mercy, $125; total $11,197.39; $6,000; National Fund, $275; total, $61,722.63; American Women's War Relief Fund, $25; Vacation War Relief Committee, $114.97; total $7,938.35; Serbian Agricultural Relief Fund, $568; Persian War Relief Fund, $820.25; total $17,276.50.
